

This is a marketing communication

Liontrust SF Managed Growth Fund: Q1 2022 review

Fund managers: Simon Clements, Peter Michaelis and Chris Foster

The Fund returned -11.7% over the quarter, underperforming the IA Flexible Investment sector average of -3.6% (which is the comparator benchmark)*†.

We have written at length about the current headwinds for our quality growth investment style, with longer-duration companies hit harder by fears of inflation and interest rate hikes intended to control it. Equities, broadly speaking, had a stronger March but we reiterate those comments, especially if this year remains volatile. In short, over the 21 years we have managed the Sustainable Future funds, we have seen many periods of inflation and interest rate shifts. During these, we have remained resolutely focused on the long-term prospects of our high-quality companies that can grow profitably year after year by making the world a better place. Our experience is that the long-term success of our investments will be determined by the compounding of growth, not the discount rate shifting up a few per cent.

Of course, this situation has been exacerbated by the conflict in Ukraine but while we are following events closely, we do not attempt to forecast macroeconomic or geopolitical factors. We continue to focus on our core competence: identifying businesses exposed to strong sustainability trends that will endure and grow their value per share regardless of the economic backdrop. At times of indiscriminate sell-offs, the market presents us with opportunities to add to our highest-conviction companies at more attractive valuations, as well as starting positions in names we have long admired but, prior to now, were fairly valued by the market.

In terms of asset allocation, that strong end to the quarter from equities was obviously positive for our exposure while our cash weighting also helped offset some of the volatility earlier in the period.

A new addition over Q1 was Masimo, under our Enabling innovation in healthcare theme. Headquartered in the US, Masimo's core product is pulse oximetry sensors, which enable a patient's vital signs to be monitored. The company places circuit boards (referred to as drivers) into bedside monitor machines and then sells the hospital sensors to pair with these devices.

These sensors are mandated by law in ICU and operating table beds but not on the general hospital floor. Masimo believes this space was around 10% penetrated with such technologies pre-Covid but that number is now likely between 20-30%. In future, the company can derive further revenues via upselling from the basic SET sensors ($8) to Rainbow sensors ($80), which have broader functionality. It also has numerous future growth avenues based on the connecting and remote monitoring of patients within hospitals and at home.

Competition for capital within the portfolio remains fierce and as Masimo comes in, we have sold our position in Abcam under the same theme. This is a global life science company focused on identifying, developing and distributing high-quality reagents and tools for its customers. While generating acceptable (above cost of capital returns), the company is also investing heavily as looks to set itself up for the future. In the short term, however, returns will certainly be depressed, with Abcam aiming for 'profitable revenues' again as part of its 2024 target.

As a top 20 shareholder, we were also consulted about a proposed long-term incentive plan for the CEO and Senior Management and expressed our view it was too generous. The company appears to be trying to compensate for perceived failings around what the CEO received historically but, in principle, we believe this is the wrong way to think about things. The past is the past and companies should not attempt to reward people with easy future targets because of this. We do believe CEOs and individuals should be incentivised and well rewarded for performance but the articulation of this plan as stands was not reassuring in our view. We therefore downgraded our management quality rating for the company and sold the holding in this fund.

Technogym is another recent sell as we have lost confidence in the long-term resilience of the company's business fundamentals. While Technogym's products remain best in class, demand from traditional customers such as gyms has collapsed, as it has from a newer channel in the shape of hotels. We remain concerned the pandemic may have long-lasting impacts upon aggregate demand for both gyms and hotels, and new gym equipment is a discretionary item that can be sacrificed in times of difficulty.

Over a volatile period marked by indiscriminate selling, we would highlight strong performance from London Stock Exchange, where shares rallied as the group announced plans to sell a group of assets known as BETA+ for US$1.1 billion to private equity firm Motive Partners and investment firm Clearlake Capital Group. The BETA+ platforms deal with securities processing, custody, clearing, and asset servicing, as well as cost and tax basis reporting software and front-end client solutions. LSEG said its data and analytics business will target mid-single digit annual revenue growth in the medium term following the divestment of BETA+.

After a steep fall towards the end of last year, Splunk enjoyed a stronger quarter, buoyed by the appointment of Gary Steele as CEO to drive the business in the next stage of its growth. Steele is a highly regarded tech executive with over 30 years of experience and a track record of successfully scaling up Software as a Service (SaaS) businesses. Splunk develops and provides operational intelligence software used to monitor, report and analyse real-time machine-generated data, regardless of the source and format, and its software enables customers to search IT systems and locate and analyse complex operational data.

Palo Alto shares also continue to tick upwards, with the company posting strong Q2 numbers at the end of February and raising guidance for fiscal year 2022. It now expects total billings in the range of $6.80 billion to $6.85 billion, which would represent year-on-year growth of between 25% and 26%. The company provides cyber security solutions for over 85,000 organisations, with a strategy to build on its leading firewall product and move to subscription-based firewall and security as a service.

Another holding boosted by results was Bright Horizons, posting revenue of $1.8 billion for the year ending 31 December, an increase of 16% on a Covid-hit 2020. This is the US market leader in corporate-sponsored childcare, which offers a range of products to support parents of young children in getting back to work. The company is built on the goal of partnering with employers to help ensure work-life balance and reduced stress in the early years of parenting, where juggling work and other responsibilities can cause anxiety. At the core of its offering is high-quality early childhood education, while innovative products such as back-up care provide additional high-margin growth.

Bright Horizons' share price has been volatile during the pandemic but we continue to believe that aim of better work-life balance and reducing stress for parents is a key long-term part of a more sustainable future when the world is able to look past the pandemic.

In terms of detractors over the period, we talked at length about DocuSign last quarter, so although the shares continue to be weak, would point to that piece as little has changed in the last three months.

PayPal has also continued to struggle, having released disappointing fourth-quarter earnings in February. The company missed analyst expectations for growth and earnings, downgraded guidance for 2022, and, most concerningly, provided new information that calls into question the growth algorithm investors had modelled for the business. Management explained the business operates on a Pareto Principle – the concept that around 30% of customers drive the majority of revenues and profits. This is not uncommon for companies but what is unusual is that it was the first time we had heard management mention this (we have been following the company since 2017). Management have therefore decided to drop their previous target of 750 million users by 2025 – they are at 426 million as of today and only released this target 12 months ago. They still believe long-term financial ambitions are achievable, but by increasing the engagement of those best customers as opposed to a combination of increasing engagement and growing new customers.

This raises a number of questions for us: why have management only just realised their business is reliant on a portion of their best customers? Does this mean the business is much more mature than investors previously thought (and should therefore trade at a lower multiple)? Does this mask the fact that competition at virtual checkouts is stronger than ever and is the two-sided network competitive moat weaker than we thought? A share price move of the magnitude seen necessitates a full review of the position; we will take our time to think through and analyse all the above points before deciding what to do, if anything, with our position.

Spotify's shares have also been weak following its 2021 fourth-quarter results released at the start of February. The results for the quarter itself were solid and generally in line with analyst expectations but the company's guidance on Q1 2022 was slightly below what the market had been expecting in terms of new monthly subscribers, which Spotify put down to an increasingly seasonal approach to marketing and acquiring new customers. The company also announced it would be no longer providing annual guidance, just focusing on the next quarter. Any company that gives less information to the market is generally looked on with great suspicion. Spotify, however, is led by the founder Daniel Ek, who comes across as extremely thoughtful and very focused on the long term and, as such, this is not something that concerns us.

Finally, despite generating positive cash flows, Spotify posted another year of accounting losses and in this market, companies not seen as generating profits today seem to be punished more than most. Although predicting the future margin profile of this business is difficult, we believe expansion is likely to follow as it continues to grow in scale, as well as grow high-margin lines such as podcasts or the marketplace business. Spotify shares are now trading at 1.7x 2022 sales – this is the lowest multiple on which the business has traded since listing in 2018 and 25% below the 2.2x it fell to during Covid. As such, we believe our internal rate of return is likely to be driven by revenue growth from here, with potential for re-rating if sentiment in the market turns.

Meanwhile, Avanza Bank, the largest savings and investment platform in Sweden, has seen its price fall over 40% from the peak seen in November 2021. Avanza's earnings are correlated to several factors, all of which are impossible to predict, including broader market levels, interest rates, and volatility of markets. 2021 was a fantastic year for the business, where earnings reached all-time highs because of a larger-than-ever customer base, high levels of trading activity, and high absolute market levels. It is therefore likely Avanza will earn less in 2022 than in 2021, while the company continues to reinvest in people and products to maintain its competitive advantage – it is around four times larger than the nearest competitor in Sweden.

As long-term investors, however, we care about what the company is likely to earn five years from now, and its relentless focus on customer satisfaction, alongside an efficient platform, means we are confident the earnings power of the business will be significantly larger in the future. After weakness in the shares, the company trades on around 20x next year's earnings – a similar multiple to the trough reached during the Covid selloff in 2020.

Discrete years' performance*, to previous quarter-end:
Past performance does not predict future returns

	Mar-22	Mar-21	Mar-20	Mar-19	Mar-18
Liontrust Sustainable Future Managed Growth 2 Acc	5.1%	41.8%	3.8%	16.9%	6.4%
IA Flexible Investment	5.0%	29.1%	-8.1%	3.3%	2.4%
Quartile	3	1	1	1	1

*Source: FE Analytics, as at 31.03.22, primary share class, total return, net of fees and income reinvested.

For a comprehensive list of common financial words and terms, see our glossary at:
<https://www.liontrust.co.uk/benefits-of-investing/guide-financial-words-terms>

---

Key Risks and disclaimer

†Past performance is not a guide to future performance. The value of an investment and the income generated from it can fall as well as rise and is not guaranteed. You may get back less than you originally invested. The issue of units/shares in Liontrust Funds may be subject to an initial charge, which will have an impact on the realisable value of the investment, particularly in the short term. Investments should always be considered as long term. Investment in the Fund involves foreign currencies and may be subject to fluctuations in value due to movements in exchange rates. Issued by Liontrust Fund Partners LLP (2 Savoy Court, London WC2R 0EZ), authorised and regulated in the UK by the Financial Conduct Authority (FRN 518165) to undertake regulated investment business. This is a marketing communication. This document should not be construed as advice for investment in any product or security mentioned, an offer to buy or sell units/shares of Funds mentioned, or a solicitation to purchase securities in any company or investment product. Examples of stocks are provided for general information only to demonstrate our investment philosophy. It contains information and analysis that is believed to be accurate at the time of publication, but is subject to change without notice. While care has been taken in compiling the content of this document, no representation or warranty, express or implied, is made by Liontrust as to its accuracy or completeness, including for external sources (which may have been used) which have not been verified. It should not be copied, forwarded, reproduced, divulged or otherwise distributed in any form whether by way of fax, email, oral or otherwise, in whole or in part without the express and prior written consent of Liontrust. Always research your own investments and if you are not a professional investor, please consult a regulated financial adviser regarding the suitability of such an investment for you and your personal circumstances. 22/275